Editorial

The recent launch of Dyal Singh Journal of Humanities and Social Science (DSJHSS) has been hailed with unexpected appreciation and acknowledgement by the academia, researchers, and scholars etc., because of not believing in their abilities. The journal is a peer reviewed research endeavor, which publishes both theoretical and applied studies on different aspects of humanities and social sciences in bilingual format. In this age of globalization, where AI is taking place, making new dimensions of close connections between diverse communities, research in humanities and social sciences has gained enormous importance, because of its relations with real humans. Our journal aims at providing a platform for academic discussion in humanities and social sciences to assist college faculty in publishing multidisciplinary content with national and international collaborations. The articles submitted to the journal undergo a rigorous process of review by esteemed national reviewers with the purpose of assessing and improving the quality of manuscripts. The journal desires researchers, scholars, teachers, and corporate professionals from across the globe to contribute to contemporary understanding of various humanities and social sciences disciplines. At this point, I would also like to extend my gratitude to the whole editorial and advisory team for their untiring efforts in making this venture possible and to the scholars, who have contributed their writings for the journal, and helped us emerge as a big success.
